The term "Lost Generation" came from a statement, "All of you young people who served in the war... you are all a lost generation." (Gertrude Stein, A Moveable Feast) The lost generation was the first generation to be labelled in history.

Lost Generation 1890-1915

This generation is silent because they would not speak out against the government. They seemed not to want to make a change or difference in the world. In contrast, they lived their lives, hoping to have enough to survive.

Interbellum Gen 1901-1913

This generation grew up in a time when the United States was prosperous, and the economy boomed. Birth rates were at an all-time high. No more world wars were going on, and the world was at peace for a while.

The Greatest Gen 1910-1924

The greatest generation grew up and most likely fought in World War 2. They fought in the civil war for their rights. Women and men all combined powers to make their country a great one to live in.

Silent Generation 1925-1945

This generation grew up in a time when the United States was prosperous, and the economy boomed. Birth rates were at an all-time high. No more world wars were going on, and the world was at peace for a while.

Baby Boomer 1946-1964

This generation grew up in a time when the United States was prosperous, and the economy boomed. Birth rates were at an all-time high. No more world wars were going on, and the world was at peace for a while.

Generation X 1965-1979

Generation X is known to have the highest rate and highest level of education in the United States to this day. This generation grew up in a world of wars and historical events.

Xennials 1975-1985

This generation is known to have more traditional relationships. These relationships are the kind to exist before social media and dating apps.

Gen Y / Millennials 1980-1994

This generation is being more independent with their opinions and choices. Global warming became a real issue during the adulthood of this generation. They are more likely to be cautious of energy conservation and saving the earth.

Generation Z 1995-2012

This generation is less likely to attend church and have a strong relationship with God. They are more likely to rely on themselves. They do not like to be under control by the government or other authority figures.
